All I want for Christmas is a new job. Ho, ho, ho, there is one thing Santa can't give you: A new job. You will have to do the gift giving to yourself.

I know you are saying I really don't want to think about this right now, but guess what? Everyone else is saying the same thing. With a little effort on your part that will give you a huge advantage over other job seeking applicants.

True, the job market does slow down for the holidays but believe me there are jobs out there. Packaging Career Hotline expects to post several inquiries in the next week. They are all asking, "where are the candidates for our jobs?"

These are good jobs too with great companies. So before you wind down for your vacation spend some time checking out opportunities that are just waiting to hear from you.

And if you are really serious about making 06 a better year, give yourself a gift for Christmas. For a nominal amount of money, you can learn the insiders secrets that can propel your career forward.

When I started my career on the packaging industry, I was just a lowly underling with no possibility for advancement. I tried all the "company touted" ways to advance my career to no avail. I was frustrated, disappointed and disenchanted about why no opportunities came my way. I was an excellent worker, on time honest and a top performer so why couldn't the "powers that be" recognize that fact?

It was because I didn't understand how to package myself. I didn't know that hard work and good performance DOES NOT equate to career advancement. YES, that's right a good performance does not mean that you will get promoted or a raise.

Visibility is the key: who you know and who knows you is the magic door opener.

And only you can make that happen. How much personal marketing have you done? I bet its not much. It's a methodical process that requires a commitment each and every week and we all know how time crunched you are. But what if you have most of the work done for you and marketing yourself was as simple as filling in the blank. Could you find some time to dedicate when you know there will be significant positive results?

Well, that time is now and I have done all the work for you. My workbook cuts through the clutter in a simplified, straightforward manner while drastically reducing the time it takes to build your personal brand. The "Packaging Yourself" hands-on guide and workbook has more career tips, examples, and "insider" secrets for the busy professional to use in the quest for the best personal brand. Discover the easy way to make yourself stand out from others.

So don't put off building your brand any longer. Don't wait till your associates get your promotion or raise or even a better job.
